Thinking about Britain's foreign aid...

Do you think that Britain should give aid money which is conditional on the aid receiving country buying more goods and services from Britain, or should aid not be conditional on their buying more goods and services?

India is one of the countries that receives British overseas aid. In general, which of these views comes closer to yours?

'India still has many of the poorest people in the world. If Britain is to continue to have a substantial aid programme, it is right for some of that aid to go to India'

India has recently announced its intention to buy French fighter aircraft, rather than the Typhoon Eurofighter, which Britain is helping to develop and make. Do you think future British aid to India should be linked to this issue?

One free school has recently announced that it is commissioning an education company, which runs schools in Sweden, to manage their school.

Supporters say that this company has an excellent reputation for running schools and this is a practical way of providing new school places in the area.

Opponents say that private companies should not be allowed to profit from running publically funded schools.

Do you support or oppose allowing this free school to commission a private company to manage their school?
