"Green belt" land means areas of countryside around some towns and cities which are currently protected from most building.

Some people have suggested that the government should relax the planning rules in the Green belt in order to boost the economy by helping housebuilders. Other people think planning restrictions on the Green belt should remain tight to stop urban sprawl and the loss of green space

An extra runway at Heathrow would be a cheaper option and would be quicker to build. It would, however, be difficult to expand further in the future and flightpaths would continue to go over London and the South East and cause noise disruption to residents.

A new airport in the Thames Estuary would allow easier future expansion, new dedicated transport links and would allow flight paths over the North Sea so they caused less disruption. It would, however, be more expensive, would take longer to build and could damage birds habitats in the estuary.

Which do you think would be the better option for future airport expansion?
