In his report on the press, Lord Justice Leveson has recommended that there should be a new regulatory body. It would be set up by the press and appointed in an independent way, with no serving newspaper editors or politicians on the board. However, Leveson has proposed that there should be new laws passed by MPs to underpin the regulator. It would be approved and overseen by Ofcom, a government appointed body that already regulates the broadcast media, postal service and phone companies.

Do you believe there should or should not be new laws, passed by MPs, to encourage newspapers to join this new system of regulation?

Lord Justice Leveson has proposed that journalists' exemption from the Data Protection Act should be ended. He argues that it would improve transparency by enabling people to submit requests to newspapers to find out what information they have about them. Critics, however, say that investigative journalism, which relies on the protection of sources when exposing corruption or wrongdoing, would be undermined. Do you believe the exemption should, or should not be ended?

Lord Justice Leveson has proposed that journalists' exemption from the Data Protection Act should be ended. He argues that it would improve transparency by enabling people to submit requests to newspapers to find out what information they have about them. Critics, however, say that investigative journalism, which relies on the protection of sources when exposing corruption or wrongdoing, would be undermined. Do you believe the exemption should, or should not be ended?
