Following tougher marking rules introduced last year, the number of pupils achieving A grades at A-level dropped for the first time in 21 years.

Thinking about this, which of these statements comes closer to your view?

[Only asked to respondents in England and Wales

It was right to introduce tougher marking rules; exams had become too easy meaning the best students couldn't stand out
It was wrong to introduce tougher marking rules; it puts current pupils at a disadvantage to previous students
Neither

Last year saw the introduction of the new system of tuition fees in England. Under the new scheme, students do not have to pay tuition fees up front, but pay them through a student loan which they will have to pay back after graduation once they are earning over £21,000 a year. Most universities charge fees of between £8000 and £9000 a year.

Regardless of whether or not you support the cost of university degrees being paid through tuition fees, do you think a university education is or is not worth £9000 a year...

At £9000 a three year university course will leave the average student at an English university with debt of £27,000, plus living costs during their time at university. However, graduates can normally expect higher salaries over the rest of their working lives. Thinking about the cost of university and graduates' earnings, which of the following best reflects your view?

[Only asked to respondents in England and Wales
n=1692]

Most graduates will still end up better off in the long term, as their increased earnings will outweigh the cost of going to university
Most graduates will end up worse off in the long term, as their increased earnings will be outweighed by the cost of going to university

Thinking about the courses universities teach, which of the following best reflects your view?

[Only asked to respondents in England and Wales

Universities should concentrate upon traditional academic subjects
Universities should concentrate upon the most economically useful subjects
Universities should provide both and let students choose which courses they apply to

Currently would-be students apply to universities BEFORE doing their A-levels, and are offered places conditional on them getting the right grades. This gives a longer period of time for would-be students to consider their application and for the universities to process applications and consider candidates, but means they have to rely on predicted exam grades.

Some people have suggested that would-be students should only apply to universities AFTER doing their A-levels. This would leave less time for would-be students to apply for university and for universities to process their applications, but they would be able to base offers on actual exam grades, not predictions

Do you think would-be students should apply to university before or after sitting their A-levels?

Gibraltar is British territory, but has its own government. Gibraltar was captured from Spain in 1704 and signed over to Britain by treaty in 1713. Spain claim that it should be part of Spain.

Recently, a dispute has arisen between Gibraltar and Spain, with Spain claiming that an artificial reef built by Gibraltar was interfering with their fishing vessels and Gibraltar claiming Spanish border agents has made it too difficult to cross the border into Spain, creating long waits and traffic congestion.

How do you think Britain should react to these events?

- We should seek to solve the current problems through diplomatic discussions with Spain, but not negotiate over Gibraltar's future and whether it remains British
- We should open negotiations with Spain about the long term future of Gibraltar and whether it should remain British, become Spanish or become a joint territory
- We should send a Royal Navy ship to Gibraltar to assert Britain's ownership of Gibraltar and force Spain to open the border
- None of these
- Don't know

Zero-hour contracts are jobs where people do not have any guaranteed hours each week, and only go into work or get paid when there is work available.

Which of the following best reflects your view?

 Zero-hour contracts are normally a bad thing - they don't provide any security and allow employers to exploit their workers
