This week the Keogh report into 14 NHS hospital trusts across the country with higher than normal death rates was published, following the emergence of the Stafford NHS scandal earlier this year. The report found some serious failings and eleven trusts were placed in special measures.

From what you have seen or heard, do you think the last Labour government did or did not deliberately cover up failings at NHS hospitals?

The government have recently announced that they will not go ahead with plans to introduce plain packaging for cigarettes, saying there was not yet enough evidence and they wanted to see how the policy worked in Australia where it has recently been introduced. Other people have suggested the government dropped the plans because they were pressurised by the tobacco companies.
