Bob Diamond, the Chief Executive of Barclays Bank, has said that the "period of remorse and apologies" from banks is over, and they should now be allowed to get on with leading economic growth. Do you agree or disagree with Mr Diamond's comments?

On a different topic...

Thinking about trade unions and the laws governing their ability to go out on strike, which of the following best reflects your view?

There are too many restrictions on trade unions and they should have more freedom to take strike action

14	3	26	9	4	25	14	17	11	10	12	17	14	13	16	11	11	14	20	17
-----------	---	----	---	---	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----

Trade unions are able to take strike action too easily and there should be more restrictions upon them

37	65	20	42	63	20	31	36	38	39	41	28	43	41	31	46	45	34	31	21
-----------	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----	----

The current balance is about right

35	28	43	45	27	42	43	39	31	21	30	44	35	36	34	28	32	39	35	47

Currently any strike action requires the approval of trade union members in a strike ballot, with a simply majority of those voting needed to call a strike. It has been suggested that the law should be changed so a strike requires the support of 50% of ALL the trade union members, whether or not they take part in the ballot. Would you support or oppose this proposal?
