Moving to the subject of tuition fees,

In principle, do you believe the government is right or wrong to reduce state funding for university tuition and pass the cost to the students?

Lord Browne has recommended that the current cap on tuition fees is removed, allowing universities in England to charge unlimited fees. Do you support or oppose this suggestion?

As well as removing the limit upon tuition fees, Lord Browne has also suggested that graduates should not have to pay back their students loans until they earn more than £21,000, up from the current threshold of £15,000. Graduates who do not reach this level will have their outstanding loans cancelled after 30 years

An alternative to tuition fees would be a graduate tax, where graduates would pay an extra income tax on their income after graduating, meaning high earning graduates could pay back substantially more than the cost of their education, while graduates with lower incomes would pay less.
