Currently when an unemployed person starts claiming Jobseekers Allowance they sign an agreement which states what steps they will take to find a job in order to receive their benefit. If they do not comply with these requirements afterwards - for example by refusing job offers, or refusing to attend interviews - then they lose some of their benefit income for a period.

Thinking about what sanctions, if any, should be given to people claiming Jobseekers Allowance who refuse job offers or interviews, which of the following best reflects your view?

They should not lose any of their benefits	6	1	8	10	3	7	8	7	5	4	7	7	6	5	8	8	6	6	6	7
They should lose a small amount of their benefits (e.g. 10%)	19	10	27	21	9	25	20	20	18	25	16	21	16	17	21	15	16	23	19	21
They should lose a large amount of their benefits, say half, but keep enough to cover their basic needs	49	57	45	53	58	47	52	50	49	46	45	49	55	51	47	53	48	48	50	53
They should lose all their benefits, regardless of what hardship it causes	21	29	16	16	27	15	16	20	22	21	26	18	20	23	18	20	26	20	19	14

We would like you to think about how this principle should be applied to different groups. In each case imagine someone in that situation was receiving Jobseekers Allowance but was not complying with their jobseekers' agreement – for example, refusing job offers or not undertaking enough job search activities.

In each case, what sanctions do you think would be appropriate for someone in that situation who do not comply with their jobseekers agreement?
