In 2009 a new top rate of income tax of 50p in the pound was introduced for earnings over £150,000. Previously the top rate of income tax had been 40p in the pound

Some people think that increasing the top rate of tax to 50p does not actually bring in much extra money, as it means some very wealthy people move abroad to escape tax. Other people think that this is exaggerated, and that the higher tax rate brings in more money. From what you have seen or heard, do you think the 50p tax rate does or does not bring in more money?

Some people have suggested that banks should be made to separate their investment banking operations (that is raising capital for companies, unwrapping and trading shares and securities) and their retail banking operations (that is, providing normal bank accounts and loans for customers and businesses).

Some people think this would help protect retail banking from the riskier investment banking in the event of another banking crisis. Other people think it would damage British banks and risk making them relocate to other countries.

Would you support or oppose rules separating retail and investment banking?

The government are proposing changes to the planning system in England. Under the changes the amount of central government rules on planning will be vastly decreased, with local councils given more powers to decide what is allowed to be built in their areas. There will be a presumption in favour of giving permission for development if it is sustainable and in line with local policies. Do you support or oppose these changes?

Green belt land means areas of countryside around some towns and cities, which are currently protected from most building to stop urban sprawl.
Brownfield land means land that has previously been built upon, such as derelict buildings and former industrial land.
Greenfield land is land that has not previously been built upon, such as agricultural land outside the greenbelt.
Thinking about these different types of land, how freely - if at all - do you think planning permission to build should be given in each one?

Currently squatting is not a criminal offence in England, providing there is no evidence of forced entry. Some have called on the law to be changed, making squatting a criminal offence. They point out that the squatters are entering the premises without the permission of the owner, making it difficult and time-consuming for landlords to remove them from their property. Others argue that it is better to put an empty property to good use highlighting that the landlords are able to remove the squatters once they have been discovered.

Do you think the law should be changed making squatting a criminal offence or should it be left as it currently is?

During the 1980s many Western countries, including the UK, cut off normal diplomatic relations with Libya in response to their involvement in terrorism. Under the last Labour government Britain and other Western countries re-established positive relations with Libya in exchange for Colonel Gaddafi's regime agreeing to abandon its programme developing weapons of mass destruction. Libya also agreed to pay compensation to the victims of the Lockerbie bombing.

Abdelbasset Ali al-Megrahi was convicted for the Lockerbie bombings in 1988. He was sentenced to a life sentence of at least 27 years following his 2001 conviction for the bombing.

It was announced in 2009 that Abdelbasset Ali al-Megrahi would be released on compassionate grounds in view of his diagnosis of advanced prostate cancer. He was subsequently flown back to his home country of Libya.
