Next week Chancellor George Osborne will announce this year's budget, Some people have called for him to increase the personal tax allowance (the amount of money that people can earn before paying income tax), if necessary by increasing other taxes, borrowing more or by making bigger cuts in public spending.

Thinking about the need to balance an increase in the personal tax allowance with other tax increases, more borrowing or bigger cuts, what do you think should happen to personal tax allowances in next week's budget?

Currently people can claim back tax on any money that they pay towards a pension for when they retire. Since higher rate taxpayers pay more in tax (40%) than people who pay basic rate income tax (20%), higher rate taxpayers also receive more back when they pay money into a pension.

Which of the following best reflects your view?

Higher tax relief on pension contributions should be abolished - all taxpayers should receive the same tax relief on pension contributions	38	38	39	41	43	36	37	41	43	33	35	32	41	41	40	36	33	41	39	37	36

India is one of the countries that receives British overseas aid. In general, which of these views comes closer to yours?

India still has many of the poorest people in the world. If Britain is to continue to have a substantial aid programme, it is right for some of that aid to go to India

British governments have in the past pledged to spend 0.7% of Britain's GDP on overseas aid. The government has now proposed to put this target into law, so that the government must spend 0.7% of Britain's GDP on overseas aid.

Do you think the government should or should not pass a law forcing British governments to spend 0.7% of GDP on international aid?
