Mr Clegg apologised for the original promise. He has not apologised for backing the increase in tuition fees. Which of these views comes closer to yours?

His big mistake was to promise something that could not be afforded in these difficult times for government finances

His big mistake was to end up backing a policy to increase tuition fees. They should have kept their promise, even if this meant backing tax rises or spending cuts elsewhere

His big mistake is to apologise now. At each stage he did what he thought was right, and has fought hard for other Lib Dem policies. He can't be blamed for changing his stance on tuition fees
